Geog104 — List of topics

Topic 1. Canada's regions

This topic introduces Canada's major geographical regions. These regions are largely defined from a historical and physical perspective. It illustrates the uniqueness and interconnectedness of places that together make up the country of Canada.

Topic 2. Canada's physical characteristics

Here we present Canada's physical environment. Canada's large geographical area contains a wide variety of physical settings. This has profound implications for settlement, resource use, and society in general.

Topic 3. Canada's historical geography

This topic explores Canada's history of settlement. It provides an overview of native settlement, European colonization and early immigration. It sheds light on the challenges of national integration.

Topic 4. Population

We examine population distribution patterns and demographic trends. Some of the themes are natural births, urbanization, contemporary immigration and ethnicity.

Topic 5. Canada's economic geography

We examine the nature of Canada's economy from a geographical perspective. We outline spatial patterns of resource production, industrialization, service production and trade.

Topic 6. Canada's regions: Ontario

Ontario is Canada's population and economic core. We examine the economic and social characteristics of this important region.

Topic 7. Canada's regions: Québec

Québec is the site of the birth of Canada. After Ontario, it is the second most important economically and demographically. We examine the characteristics of the uniquely French-speaking province.

Topic 8. Canada's regions: The Prairie Provinces

Since the 1990s, the Prairie provinces (Western Canada) has been Canada's main growth region thanks to its abundant fossil fuel resources. We examine the challenges faced by these provinces in the context of the changing global economy.

Topic 9. Canada's regions: British Columbia

British Columbia, a province rich in natural resources, has its economy increasingly oriented towards trade with Asia. Its population also reflects rapidly growing immigration from Asia. We examine the demographic and economic challenges facing this region.

Topic 10. Canada's regions: The Atlantic provinces

The Atlantic provinces represent a slow-growth region. We investigate the processes of social and economic challenges facing this region.

Topic 11. Canada's regions: The Territorial North

The Territorial North is both a resource frontier and the homeland of northern Indigenous peoples. We investigate the challenges faced by these communities.
