COURSE GUIDELINES & EXPECTATIONS

"A good basic selling idea, involvement and relevancy, of course, are as important as ever, but in the advertising din of today, unless you make yourself noticed and believed, you ain't got nothin'." Leo Burnett

This course focuses on the development of an effective integrated marketing communications (IMC) plan within the framework of an organization's total marketing strategy. Specifically, Mark 220 examines advertising, direct response, online interactive communications, sales promotion, public relations, and event marketing, with the objective of ensuring that the appropriate message and media are selected to reach the target audience. A wide range of topics is covered including: IMC philosophy and purpose, communication strategy, creative approaches to message and media development, as well as media selection and evaluation.

Upon completion of this course, students should have a clear understanding of how the various components of the marketing communications mix might interact with each other in order to create an IMC plan that will resolve a business problem.

This course is fast paced and focuses on learning by doing, in that by the end of the term, students will have completed an integrated marketing communications plan for a local organization or event. Classroom sessions include discussion and debate based on readings from the text and other sources, labs and assignments, guest speakers and project activities.

This is a demanding course. However, it can be a lot of fun too. Please read assigned chapters and take part in the course discussions. Feel free to provide your input by asking questions and contributing from your experience.

Your attendance online/ in class is expected.
