CALENDAR DESCRIPTION

Students will continue to explore the integral calculus topics begun in MATH 191 and then be introduced to ordinary differential equations and to probability and statistics, with a focus on applications to civil and mechanical engineering technology. In calculus, students will study integration techniques, polar coordinates, and double integrals. Students then learn to solve introductory first and second order differential equations with applications. In probability and statistics, students will examine measures of centre and variability; discrete and continuous random variables; confidence intervals; and linear regression.

PREREQUISITE(S):

One of:

C in MATH 101

C in MATH 191

CO-REQUISITE(S): Not applicable

EQUIVALENCIES: Not applicable

COURSE LEARNING OUTCOMES / OBJECTIVES

Upon completion of this course a student will be able to:

Integrate algebraic, exponential, logarithmic and trigonometric functions.

Use methods of integration, including integration by parts and non-repeated linear partial fractions.

Find partial derivatives of functions.

Evaluate double integrals using both Cartesian and polar coordinates and use double integration to calculate volumes under three-dimensional surfaces.

Solve separable and linear first-order differential equations.

Solve second-order linear homogeneous and non-homogeneous differential equations with constant coefficients.

Solve application problems involving first and second-order differential equations, including mass-spring systems.

Calculate probabilities using counting techniques and basic probability.

Graph a data set using a variety of presentations. Calculate the mean, median, and standard deviation of a data set and interpret the results.

Solve problems involving discrete probability distributions such as binomial and Poisson, and continuous probability distributions such as the normal distribution.

Calculate point estimates and confidence intervals for means of both large and small samples.

For a bivariate data set, calculate the linear regression line using the method of least squares, either using a scientific calculator or using appropriate software. Calculate and interpret the coefficients of correlation and determination.
