COURSE GUIDELINES & EXPECTATIONS

This introductory course will familiarize you with the historical roots of experimental psychology and review some of its current topics, which include the following: psychological research methods, behavior genetics, evolutionary psychology, neuroscience, states of consciousness, sensation, perception, learning, memory, thinking, and language. In addition to studying the concepts associated with these topics, you will have the opportunity to engage in your own independent research as part of your course assignments. The survey of psychological concepts covered in this course will provide you with the background in psychology required for taking specialized courses in psychology while the first-hand experience you will gain in conducting psychological research will provide you with the skills to critically evaluate research claims for their practical usefulness in your personal and professional life.

ASSIGNED READINGS

All of the assigned readings for this course are from the course textbook. The Course Schedule above lists the specific chapters and subsections of the textbook that you are to read each week. You should complete these assigned readings prior to class so that you can fully contribute to discussions of the material. Concept notes, available in D2L Content, list the names of the concepts and their associated points (taken from the assigned readings) that you will need to know for quizzes and exams. However, it is recommended that you read all of the information in the assigned readings and not just rely upon these concept notes since the organization, figures, and additional information contained within the course textbook will help improve your overall understanding of the concepts. An online version of the course textbook, as well as additional resources such as study guides and video resources, can be accessed through the Myers & DeWall textbook website (known as LaunchPad) via the following link: <https://www.macmillanhigher.com/launchpad/myers12e/18894135>. If you experience any technical problems with that website, please contact their Customer Support by visiting: <https://macmillan.force.com/macmillanlearning>

QUIZZES

To help ensure you are familiar enough with the concepts from the assigned readings to be able to engage in in-depth discussions of them in class, before each lecture day you should complete in D2L the quiz for that lecture. All quizzes will cover solely the material from the assigned readings that the concept notes contain. Each quiz will contain 20 questions about randomly chosen concept points on a given lecture topic. Each question on the quizzes will describe one of the concept points and ask for the name of that concept. The format of the quizzes will be matching-type questions, with each question listing alphabetically as answer options the names of all the concepts from the relevant lecture and you will be instructed to match the given concept description with its concept name. Half of the quiz questions will be knowledge-type questions which use for descriptions of the concepts the same wording as the points in the concept notes, while the other half of quiz questions will be understanding-type questions which reword these points usually in the form of a real-life scenario. You can access each quiz through D2L Quizzes and take it an unlimited number of times up until its deadline (see the Course Schedule above), with only the highest score you achieve recorded as your mark for that quiz. In addition to being worth marks, the quizzes will also help prepare you for exams since they cover the same content from the concept notes, although they use different scenarios for the understanding-type questions.

EXAMS

Exams will be in-class, closed book, and will follow the same format as the quizzes (as described above), except that they will be longer (~50-100 questions) and cover multiple lecture topics. The content of the questions will cover equally the concepts from each lecture topic that the exam is designed to assess your knowledge/understanding of. You will only be given a single attempt at each exam.

RESEARCH ASSIGNMENTS

Simulated Research

The Nobel prize-winning psychologist, Daniel Kahneman, once wrote, “The test of learning psychology is whether your understanding of situations you encounter has changed, not whether you have learned a new fact.” With that purpose in mind, the simulated research assignments are designed to have you apply your knowledge from this course to simulated life situations. Using computer programs called AppliedGames that are available in D2L Content, you will work in-lab, either individually or in pairs, to solve relevant practical problems that might be encountered outside the classroom. You can then submit the best results from your AppliedGame attempts to D2L Assignments for marks.

Actual Research

As an alternative to the simulated research assignments, with special permission from the instructor you may conduct actual research in which you develop and write in stages throughout the semester a psychological research project involving a longitudinal study of yourself and your group members. Instructions, forms, templates, and examples for these assignments are available in D2L Content. Each week, you will work on the project outside of class time and then in lab verbally present your work to your instructor for feedback before your research group submits their written work through D2L Assignments. Since each stage builds on the work of previous stages, you must correctly complete each stage in order to receive marks on subsequent stages, with opportunities given throughout the semester for revisions of previous stages. Groups are encouraged to work ahead on research assignments but must wait for written instructor approval of proposed methods before data collection takes place.

DEADLINES

The Course Schedule above lists the specific dates for when the quizzes/exams are due. There are no make-up quizzes/exams for this course. Failing to take a quiz/exam by its scheduled date will result in a score of zero for that quiz/exam. Exceptions may be granted at the discretion of the instructor for demonstrated cases of hardship or extenuating circumstances (e.g., a medical emergency). In the case of such extenuating circumstances, for missed quizzes the marks will be waived while for missed exams make-up exams will be arranged. In contrast to the hard deadlines for quizzes/exams, research assignments may be submitted for marks anytime throughout the semester until the last lab has passed, at which point missed research assignments will receive a score of zero. While the simulated research assignments will each be marked only a single time after submission, the actual research assignments may be revised and resubmitted multiple times for marks. However, students granted permission to conduct the actual research assignments, but who fail to show up to lab and earnestly contribute in a timely fashion to their group's research project, may have their permission revoked by the instructor and be left with only the option to do the simulated research assignments for marks.
